Legal Description

This record was the subject of a minor enhancement on 25 June 2015.

This monument includes a Roman barrow situated on the summit of a hill overlooking the valley of the River Bourne and 60m south west of the Roman road called the 'Portway'. Known locally as either 'Ende Burgh' or 'Hand Barrows' the Roman barrow survives as an oval platform measuring 45m long by 22m wide and up to 1m high topped with two steeply sided circular mounds, the northern one is 20m in diameter and 1m high with a central depression and the southern is 15m in diameter and 1.6m high with a hollow on its western side. In the 19th century Anglo-Saxon intrusive burials were discovered and a partial exploration was carried out by Sqd Ldr Dickinson and Lt Scullard Wady in 1941. Colt Hoare originally defined the earthwork as being a long barrow, but it has been variously interpreted as two round barrows, built on top of an earlier bell barrow or as a Roman barrow.
